Polished, premium-looking store, but the hero says nothing and trust signals are thin

The big red LED mask photos and the CHROMA Skin Tech logo make it fairly clear you sell light-therapy skincare devices. But the first hero slide has no headline at all, just a "Shop Now" button, so a visitor isn't told what the mask does, who it's for or why they should pick Chroma. A US shopper also sees prices in pounds a scroll later, which raises a question you'd rather they didn't have.

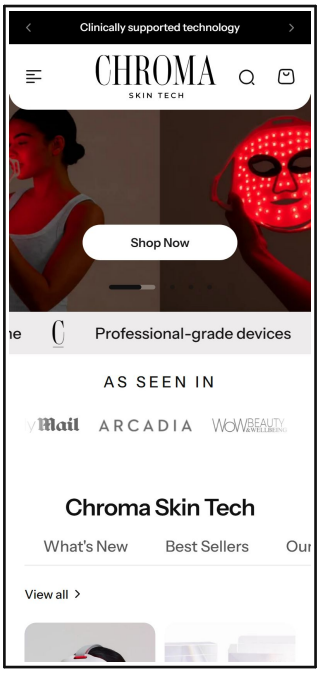

The site looks expensive in a good way. Clean type, good product photography and a calm black and white palette suit a premium device brand, and the "As seen in" strip with Forbes and Daily Mail is a strong early trust signal. Where it falls short is persuasion. The hero slide I landed on has no words beyond "Shop Now", there are no star ratings or customer reviews anywhere on the first screens, and two of the four products in the "What's New" tab show "Sold Out" with a "Coming Soon" placeholder image. Prices show in GBP (£279.99) even though the business is listed in Miami. Behind the scenes, the page title and meta description are both just "Chroma", and two hero/banner images weigh 1.4 MB and 1.65 MB each. All of this is fixable without a redesign.

What I Found

Hero slide has no headline or value proposition

HIGH

Conversion (CRO) | Desktop and phone hero

What I saw: The first hero slide shows two mask photos and a white 'Shop Now' button with no heading or supporting line. The page text shows copy like 'Clear Skin. No Downtime.' exists, but it sits on later carousel slides that most visitors won't wait for.

Why it matters: Visitors get no reason to click in the first few seconds. People who don't already know the brand have to scroll to work out what the mask does and why it's worth £279.99.

What I'd do: Put a headline and one-line benefit on the first slide, for example 'Clearer, firmer skin in 10 minutes a day' plus 'Clinically supported LED therapy, no downtime'. Consider dropping the carousel for one fixed hero so the message never rotates away.

No customer reviews or star ratings on the homepage

HIGH

Trust & credibility | Product grid and first three screens

What I saw: Product cards for the Chroma LED Face Mask, Collagen Mask, Chroma PRO and LED Neck & Décolleté Mask show only name and price. I didn't see any star ratings, review counts or testimonials on desktop or phone.

Why it matters: For a £230 to £500 device, shoppers want proof from real users. Press logos help, but without reviews many will leave to look for them elsewhere.

What I'd do: Install a reviews app (Judge.me, Okendo or similar), show stars and review counts on product cards, and add a short testimonial strip with before and after photos below the press logos.

'Sold Out' and 'Coming Soon' placeholders in the product grid

HIGH

Conversion (CRO) | Desktop 'Chroma Skin Tech' product section

What I saw: Two of the four cards in the 'What's New' tab carry a 'Sold Out' badge and a generic 'COMING SOON' image instead of a product photo.

Why it matters: Half of the first product row looks empty, which makes the store feel unfinished and wastes the most valuable product space.

What I'd do: Default the tab to 'Best Sellers', hide sold-out items from the homepage, and replace placeholder images with real photos. If you want pre-launch interest, add a 'Notify me' button instead.

Prices shown in pounds for a Miami business

MEDIUM

Trust & credibility | Product cards and checkout settings

What I saw: Every price displays in GBP (£279.99, £16.99, £495.99, £229.99). The store data shows currency GBP and region GB, while the business is listed in Miami, United States.

Why it matters: US visitors have to guess the dollar price and may assume shipping, duties or returns will be awkward, which puts people off buying.

What I'd do: Turn on Shopify Markets so US visitors see USD prices, and add a line about US shipping and returns in the announcement bar.

MEDIUM

SEO basics | Homepage head tags

What I saw: Title is 'Chroma' (6 characters), the meta description and social share description are also 'Chroma', and there is no structured data. The H1 tag wraps the logo image rather than a real heading.

Why it matters: Google and social shares get no description of what you sell, and 'Chroma' is a crowded word, so you're unlikely to show up for searches like 'LED face mask'.

What I'd do: Set the title to something like 'Chroma Skin Tech | Clinically Supported LED Face Masks' and write a 140 to 160 character description. Add Product schema with prices and reviews, and make the hero headline the page's H1.

Two oversized PNG images make the page heavy

MEDIUM

Speed | Hero banner and 'ChatGPT_Image' section

What I saw: The homepage downloads about 4 MB across 61 requests. Banner_resize_2.png is 1.4 MB and took 1.08 s to load, and a file named ChatGPT_Image_Aug_31_2026...png is 1.65 MB. Both are PNGs, not modern formats.

Why it matters: On mobile data the hero appears late, and visitors may scroll past or leave before it loads.

What I'd do: Re-export these as JPG or WebP photos at around 200 to 300 KB each. Also rename files so the AI-tool name doesn't appear in public image URLs.

MEDIUM

Design | Phone 'Find Your Chroma Solution' section

What I saw: On my phone the black text 'Non-invasive. Intelligent. Skin-led.' and 'Find Your Chroma Solution' sits directly on a close-up of a face and hand. Words like 'Skin-led' and 'Chroma' are partly lost against the skin tones, and the 'back to top' button covers part of the 'I want to treat' line.

Why it matters: This product-finder quiz is a good selling tool, but if people can't read it they won't use it.

What I'd do: Add a light overlay behind the text or move the copy into a solid panel above the photo, and move the back-to-top button so it doesn't overlap content.

Theme leftovers and repeated filler text

LOW

Design | Search field and scrolling text band

What I saw: The search placeholder reads 'Search lipstick, serum, perfume ...', which is the theme's default, not your products. The grey scrolling band repeats the same five phrases ('Professional-grade devices', 'Visible results, no downtime') many times over.

Why it matters: Small details like this make a premium brand feel templated and less carefully built.

What I'd do: Change the search placeholder to 'Search LED masks, devices...' and either cut the scrolling band or swap it for concrete facts like '60-day guarantee' or 'Free US shipping', if those apply.

What's Already Working

- The 'As seen in' row with Forbes, Daily Mail, Closer and WoW Beauty sits right under the hero on both desktop and phone, which is exactly where press credibility belongs.
- Product photography is strong and on-brand. The red-lit mask shots and the woman holding the white mask make the product easy to picture using.
- On the phone there's a sticky bottom bar with Home, Shop, Cart and Account, and the main buttons ('Shop Now', 'View Product') are wide and easy to tap.
- The three benefit blocks (Non-Invasive Technology, Clinically Supported Results, Skin-Barrier Friendly) answer real buyer worries in plain words.

Action Plan

Step	What to do	Why it helps	Effort
1	Add a clear headline and one-line benefit to the first hero slide (or replace the carousel with one fixed hero) and keep the 'Shop Now' button.	Visitors understand the product and the reason to buy within seconds, so more of them click through to shop.	Low
2	Install a reviews app, show star ratings on product cards and add a testimonial or before-and-after strip under the press logos.	Gives shoppers the social proof they expect before spending £230 or more on a device.	Medium
3	Remove 'Sold Out' and 'Coming Soon' cards from the homepage grid and default the tab to Best Sellers.	The first product row shows only things people can buy, and the store looks complete.	Low
4	Enable USD pricing for US visitors through Shopify Markets and state US shipping and returns terms in the announcement bar.	Removes doubt for American buyers about cost, delivery and returns.	Medium
5	Rewrite the page title and meta description, add Product schema, and compress the two large PNG banners to WebP or JPG.	Better search listings and share previews, and a faster-loading hero on phones.	Low

My take

You've done the hard part. The brand looks premium, the photography is good and the press logos are strong. What's missing is the selling: a hero that says what the mask does, reviews that prove it works, and a product row with nothing sold out in it. Fix those first, then sort out the pricing currency and the page title. None of it needs a redesign, and I'd expect visitors to trust the site more once it's done.
